Advocacy in Alameda County Panel Discussion
Wednesday, September 22, 7:30 pm

We are so pleased to present an overview of mental health advocacy in Alameda County. (Readers from other counties will benefit as well, as there are many areas of overlap). Topics to be presented include an overview of current state and federal legislation, an explanation of how the Alameda County Behavioral Health Care System operates regarding funding and decision points, a description of advocacy actions we all can take, and an update on Families Advocating for the Seriously Mentally Ill (FASMI).

The Zoom platform doesn’t incorporate a long table with discussants sharing their expertise; so this will be slightly different. Participants include persons knowledgeable about legislation, a representative from the Office of Family Empowerment, and founding members of FASMI. Please join us.

Speaker Meeting starts at 7:30 pm
The presentation will be Zoom/online, and attendees should preregister at our website: https://namieastbay.org, click on “What’s New,” and follow the link.

Note: The meeting will be available in written form in the newsletter, and video-recorded and accessible via the What’s New link on our website.

Discussion Group on Patients’ Rights
Wednesday, October 27, 7:30 pm

Our Fourth Wednesday online discussion group in October will address the subject of patients’ rights. Francesca Tenenbaum, director of Patients’ Rights Advocates, will share with us about their mandated responsibilities for patients under involuntary detentions and the handling of violations and concerns. Registration will be available on the NAMI East Bay website.

Future Planning Discussion from June

Our Fourth Wednesday online discussion group in June addressed the topic of planning for our ill relative when we parents are not present. We had around 15 participants and it was a robust discussion, accessible via the video recording posted on our website under “What’s New.” In short, we discussed data needed around: (1) independent functioning; (2) personal management through a private case manager or insurance and In Home Support Services; (3) finances through fiduciary assistance and special needs trust; and (4) housing options.

Family to Family Class in January

We will again be offering our eight-week Family to Support Meetings

For the duration of shelter-in-place and social-distancing orders from Alameda County, NAMI East Bay is offering online Family Support Meetings every Tuesday from 6 to 8 pm via Zoom. You can go to our website https://namieastbay.org, click on “What We Offer,” and follow the link to “Online Support Groups.” Or you can register here via Zoom.

Note: Invites to a Zoom meeting will include phone numbers, links, meeting identification, and passwords. You can join any meeting by phone and voice only, but to participate by video you need to download the Zoom app before joining the group.

We will again be offering our eight-week Family class starting in mid-January. These free, two-and-a-half-hour classes for family members cover the whole topic of mental illness (diagnoses, meds, coping, communication, brain function, etc.). Please let us know if you are interested in joining. As of right now, we are not sure whether this will be an online class or in person at our site in Albany.

In the meantime, there is a class being offered by the Family Education and Resource Center (FERC) starting September 30. To register or for more information, contact jisegen@mhaac.org or evalle@mhaac.org.

The NAMI EAST BAY NEWSLETTER is published bi-monthly, beginning in January, by NAMI East Bay, 980 Stannage Ave., Albany, CA 94706.

Telephone: 510-524-1250 - Email: namieastbay@gmail.com - Website https://namieastbay.org

Editor: Liz Rebensdorf  Mailing: Carla Wilson  Format: Tom Thomas  Technical Logistics: Michael Godoy

NAMI East Bay Newsletter

Speaker Notes

Telehealth and Changes in Mental Health Care

Summarized by Thomas T. Thomas

Dr. Kim P. Norman, MD, is the Distinguished Chair of Adolescent and Young Adult Health at the University of California, San Francisco, and a psychiatrist with over 40 years of experience caring for young adults and families with mental health challenges.

In 2004, he founded the Telemedicine and Scalable Therapeutics Program at UCSF’s Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences, where troubled young people and their families receive the best available clinical care, irrespective of their ability to pay. He has also pioneered new, scalable, and personalized approaches to psychotherapy like GritX.org.

“What keeps me awake at night,” Dr. Norman said, “is that if all my patients are doing well, then I’m not taking on enough challenges.” He explained that he can only see about ten patients a day, or seventy in a week. Even though he takes on patients who need help the most—those with schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, suicidal ideation, etc.—he still gets calls from patients with severe mental illness, and from their parents and friends, who need help.

of arrogance. You come into my office, pay a big fee and spend hours and hours talking about yourself. But people learn and grow in all different ways, and you have to respect that.”

Medical schools since World War II have divided their departments, and specialties like cardiology and nephrology, into general medicine and surgery. In the same way, psychology became divorced from neurology, which separated the study of the mind from the underlying organ, the brain—like separating ophthalmology from the study of the eye.

But the 1970s were also the beginning of the biological revolution, where mental illness was treated on a biopsychosocial model. “Biology plays a tremendous role in behavior,” Dr. Norman said, “as does neurochemistry—leading to remedies in pharmacueticals—and in physical approaches such as electro convulsive therapy [ECT] and transcranial magnetic stimulation [TMS]. There are also social implications like trauma and post-traumatic stress disorder.”

Also, we now know that a lot of psychotherapy don’t require intensive, one-on-one sessions—fo which there are not enough hours in the day or quality control with evidence-based practices. For example cognitive behavior therapy (CBT) focuses on how a person thinks, feels, and acts. It shows the person tha
This led him to develop GritX, which consistently scales evidence-based services in an online format. It is available to thousands of patients—the current usage is about 2,500 per day—without the barriers of insurance costs, “consumable” hours of professional time, and cultural differences. The process is “asynchronous,” because the patient gets therapy in his or her own timeframe, rather than at the pace of individual sessions with a human therapist.

With that introduction, Dr. Norman opened the discussion to questions.

Q. What evolution have you seen in the field of psychology in your lifetime?

By the 1970s, psychoanalysis—which focuses on early childhood experiences and traumas—had passed its peak as the dominant model. This focus had suggested that bad parenting—the “schizophrenogenic mother”—was the source of most mental illnesses.

“When I was in training,” he said, “there was a lot of the reaction to a negative situation (“I’m a loser”) can be turned into more positive thoughts (“I wasn’t prepared” or “You win some, you lose some”).

One scalable form of therapy is self-help book: like David Burns, MD’s The Feeling Good Handbook. But many people might buy it and not read it, or read the first chapter and then stop. So using such a tool in the context of a support group or online discussion is more helpful.

Q. How do you know when to get therapy and when to get medication?

You don’t have to be in crisis to talk to a therapist—although these days, with insurance paying for the cost of treatment, it is too common for a doctor’s referral to be sent automatically to the emergency room, as if it were a 911 call with an involuntary hold.

If you can’t “stay in the moment,” if anxiety or depression is keeping you from functioning, if you can’t regulate your emotions, then you want to talk to a psychotherapist. In the current healthcare system, this would be that invested in writing a self-help book or online service which thousands of patients can access on their own.

---

1 “Consumable” hours are those that a therapist devotes to sitting one-on-one with a patient, while “non-consumable” time

---

NAMI East Bay Newsletter

this usually begins with a psychologist or social worker. If you still are suffering, then you will want to meet with a psychiatrist, who can prescribe medications.

Q. How do you find a psychiatrist?

You can get a referral from a friend or a professional like a school counselor. Psychology Today offers listings by location and specialty. But it’s best to meet the person and trust your gut. Ideally, the psychiatrist will offer a free introductory interview where you can decide if he or she is a good listener, asks questions or makes comments that give you an “aha” moment, or challenges you to know yourself better.

Q. How do you deal with patients exhibiting anosognosia, denying that they are sick?

Denial is a form of self-deception, and it may be based on fear of stigma. So if a patient denies being mentally ill, you can focus on problems that the illness may be causing, like relationships with other people, ability to focus and concentrate, and functioning of the person to select an object and focus on it to be come grounded. This part of the program includes free responses and fill-in-the-blank statements.

3. Self-Care Toolkit asks the person what thing makes them feel good on a daily basis.

4. Journaling provides prompts that let the person put their feelings into words.

5. Sketchbook works like journaling, but for those who are more visually oriented, with drawing aids and stamps.

6. Catch Your Breath includes tools for breathing and meditation.

7. Expedition takes the best content and skills, based on specific life challenges, and integrates them into a course for the person.

8. Chat is an emotionally intelligent bot—now beta version, but it’s learning everyday—that engages in a relationship between a good friend and a therapist.

GritX is also available as a downloadable application that includes the website’s content and materials.
ability to focus and concentrate, and functioning at school and work.

Q. Can cognitive behavior therapy (CBT) be used effectively with obsessive/compulsive disorder (OCD)?

OCD is a brain disorder but arises from an important human need to pay attention and take care. We are all born prematurely and need a mother’s obsessive care to survive in the wild. And, for example, good doctor is obsessed with the care of his patients.

But when the mechanism for caring becomes excessive—checking the stove repeatedly, washing your hands seventeen times, so that it interrupts your day—then CBT can help you with controlling your thoughts and with breathing exercises.

Q. Tell us more about the GritX program.

NAMI East Bay’s Michael Godoy, who helped develop the program, stepped in to explain. GritX gives the user everything they could learn in personal therapy but without the time and cost.

1. Skills Studio starts the program with a self-care book that is constantly being updated with evidence-based practices, which are cited in references. It is written at a sixth-grade level and includes illustrations. The skills help the person with emotional regulation, life challenges, and various scenarios. It includes a Body Scan that links to other sections of the program.

2. Self-Interview is an interactive dialog reflecting the person’s life situation. For example, it may ask

The full presentation recording is available on the NAMI East Bay website under What’s New. Past Speaker Notes articles are available online at www.thomasstthomas.com/NAMI.htm.

NAMI East Bay Newsletter

Musings

Families are so visibly relieved when they share that their relative is “finally in therapy.” In today’s reality, this generally means a 20- to 45-minute individual talk on a varied schedule from once a week to once a month with a trained therapist—oftentimes at substantial cost. Details depend on specificity of target issues or problems, specialities of the professional therapist and—bottom line—insurance coverage.

Our August speaker, Dr. Kim Norman, has a provocative take on therapy which is worth delving into further here. (Notes on his presentation are shared in therapy, and that would be such behaviors as retreating, clarifying thoughts and emotions, rewording, prioritizing, etc.

Of primary importance is your modeling of self-care, whether it be yoga, massage, deep breathing, hiking, or sitting under a redwood tree. This is not only modeling self-care but is also accomplishing your own necessary self-therapy.

Family members are not trained therapists, but we can certainly provide help.

Liz Rebensdorf, President, NAMI East Bay
An Advocacy First Step

A family member asked me recently how he can actually change the world. Now it’s hard to tell. We family members have been trying to change the world for years. In some ways it’s been getting worse—fewer and fewer beds and board-and-cares or other suitable housing. And in some ways it’s getting better—some journalists and elected officials do understand now that serious mental illness is a medical issue; it causes terrible suffering and disruption; it needs treatment; and many people affected by it are too ill to know they need help. And there’s hope that the latter insight will grow and reverse the trend of trying to wish away serious mental illness and facilities to deal with it.

1. Tell your story. There are several things you could do with your story:
   - Share it with your county supervisor and other elected officials and tell them what helped and what hasn’t helped.
   - Make it into a letter-to-the-editor after some news event.
   - Make it into an op-ed.
   - Include it in a book like Tomorrow Was Yesterday by Dede Ranahan.
   - Make it into a video.

2. Help Families Advocating for the Seriously Mentally Ill (FASMI) organize into a diverse group with a simple message and take our message to elected officials. Learn who your state, federal, and county representatives are—especially county, because the county is responsible for keeping your loved one alive and well, if anyone is. Come with us when we get meetings with these elected officials.

NAMI East Bay Newsletter

3. Every once in a while, you can show up at meetings of bureaucrats, like the Mental Health Advisory Board, and use the opportunity to tell them what isn’t working. There are innumerable state bodies also, like the Mental Health Services Act Oversight Committee, that rarely hear from us, though.

The book Hidden Valley Road by Robert Kolker, about a family with six children diagnosed with schizophrenia, devotes a large amount of space to the search for answers, with generally inconclusive results. In some cases, the provocation leading to specific research was the exploration of a coincidence, a
4. Take advantage of occasions—state and federal legislation being proposed, or budget discussions going on—to practice telling your story. Say what has helped and what hasn’t helped.

5. If you want, take advantage of county budget discussions and tell your story to the supervisors in writing or in person. Tell them what the county needs to spend money on. Particulars matter. Your story matters.

—Alison Monroe, FASMI

NAMI California Conference

The annual NAMI California Conference will be held virtually on October 14-15, 2021. To see the comprehensive list of speakers, topics, and event details, go to https://namica.org and follow the links to conference registration.

COVID and Serious Mental Illness

Research (per the Treatment Advocacy Center report 8/4/21) is showing that persons with serious mental illness (SMI) are a high-risk group in the fight against the COVID-19 virus. Based on an international review of 19,000 patients with both a SMI diagnosis and the virus infection, it was found that there was an increase in the likelihood of dying at a rate 1.67 times that of people without the psychiatric diagnosis. Several factors have been implicated in this finding such as healthcare access and social factors, along with comorbidities such as smoking, obesity, and substance abuse.

But another significant question is raised related to these findings and that is regarding immunological differences and the medical impact they create. We plead with researchers to further explore this area.

One research was the exploration of a coincidence, a synchronicity. Why are our ill relatives becoming sicker with this?

There was some recent fuss made and, fortunately, individuals with SMI were moved up in the line to receive vaccines. Around the same time, a new relevant book came out, The Angel and the Assassin by Donna Jackson Nakazawa. It examines the impact that microglia, immune cells in the brain, have on everything from depression to Alzheimer’s Disease to psychosis, described as a “paradigm-shifting reading for all of us.” We can only hope that the scientific world can turn its attention to this area of inquiry regarding the immunity factor.

Providers for Diverse Communities

We live in a wonderfully diverse community with neighbors and friends from around the world. Here is a list of resources available for client-specific communities and their county service area (N-north county, S-south, C-central). Google them and check their websites for more information.

- Afghan: International Rescue Committee (N), Afghan Coalition (S).
- Asian - East: Asian Health Services (N), Korean Community Center of the East Bay (N), Tri-City Health Center (S).
- Middle Eastern and Arabic: Diversity Health in Training Institute (N,C).
- Native American: Native American Health Center (N,C).
- Native Hawaiian and Pacific Islander: Richmond Area Multi-Service (N,S).
- South Asian: Hume Center (countywide).
- Southeast Asian: Center for Empowering Refugees and Immigrants (countywide).
Are your dues paid for 2021?
(Check Mailing Label)
Your Support Matters
Renew Now!

---

NAMI EAST BAY 2021 MEMBERSHIP

Please check your mailing label. If the code “21” is over your name on the right side of the label, your dues are current through 2021. If your mailing label indicates a previous year, or nothing at all, your dues are not current.

We urge you to mail your 2021 dues now. And if you can afford to add a bit more, please do so. Your $40 NAMI East Bay membership gives you our newsletter six times a year, the quarterly “Connection” from NAMI-California, and the NAMI-National “Advocate.” NAMI East Bay is nonprofit [501(c)3] and your dues and contributions are tax deductible.

☐ Family Membership, $60 per year ☐ Open Door Membership, $5 per year

Make checks payable to “NAMI EAST BAY” and mail to NAMI East Bay, 980 Stannage Avenue, Albany, California 94706

☐ Contact me for Family to Family Education Class

Name: __________________________________________ Phone No.: ____________________

Address: _________________________________________________________________

Email: _________________________________________________________________

I’d like to volunteer: ☐ In the Office ☐ Grant Writing ☐ Membership Committee
☐ Hospitality Committee ☐ Labeling Newsletters ☐ Computer Committee